

Director of Advocacy & Communications

Salary range: $70,000 - $80,000

The Director of Advocacy & Communications at the National Organization for Women - New York City (NOW-NYC) and Women's Justice NOW (our charitable partner organization) (WJN) will be responsible for translating the vision of NOW-NYC and Women's Justice NOW into relevant and timely campaigns, both online and on-the-ground. The Director of Advocacy & Communications will also develop and maintain relationships with the press and act as the chief point of contact for media.

We are looking for a strategic thinker and outstanding communicator to lead our team of grassroots activists, interns and staff to achieve legislative, policy and cultural change to advance women's rights. Through this work, we seek to hold elected leaders and the business community accountable to the women of New York and to make lasting, positive change toward women's equality. The ideal candidate will bring keen political insight, campaign know-how, and an organizer's sensibility to aligning the pursuit of short-term wins with long-term values and goals.

Key Responsibilities

- Oversee tracking, timelines and management of campaigns and deliverables
- Organize state and local efforts to deliver on annual legislative priorities, including overseeing and supporting lobbying efforts
- Work in partnership with the president to develop and execute a communications strategy that advances campaign and organizational goals and supports membership, volunteer and donor engagement, including through press releases, op-eds, memos of support/opposition, blog and other website content, and social media
- Oversee the cultivation of strong, city and statewide grassroots organizing, coalition building, strategic partnerships, and volunteer and member engagement
- Organize targeted community engagement and educational events

Qualifications, Skills and Qualities Sought

- 5+ years relevant professional experience
- Exceptional written and oral communication skills, ability to be a quick thinker and writer
- A strong understanding of New York politics
- Strong relationship management skills and ability to lead and inspire
- Demonstrated ability to be flexible, self-directed and driven; to work independently under pressure and in a fast-paced environment; and to juggle multiple tasks and priorities

- Understanding of coalition-building and grassroots organizing
- Record of conceptualizing and delivering effective advocacy campaigns
- Demonstrated judgment and discretion
- Excellent organizational skills, including attention to detail and the ability to manage time effectively, track and follow-up on various tasks and multi-task
- Communications capability across multiple platforms, including digital and print, and experience liaising with and developing relationships with press
